

Camilla Adelle

Geography Teacher

Teaching is my finale, my privileged and my pleasure. After many years working abroad in universities and alongside diverse communities and government officials, I returned to the UK with a strong desire to work in my own community. I wanted to make a difference — one lesson, one day, and one student at a time.

I re-trained as a geography teacher at the University of East London and was delighted to secure a position at WHS, my local school. From the very beginning, I have felt welcomed, valued, and supported, especially during my early ECT years, which can be demanding regardless of prior life experience. I genuinely love being in school. Every day is exciting, unpredictable, demanding, and deeply rewarding.

My academic background and real-world experience allow me to bring a distinctive perspective to the classroom. Through this, I aim to inspire students to think like geographers and, above all, to become informed, thoughtful, and responsible global citizens.
